The biggest upgrade is the introduction of layers and filters, which allows you to create complex effects using several layers. Layers can be used for many things. It is used to cut out parts of an image ('clone'), blend two images to make one image ('merge'), or add an image to an existing image and make it stand out ('add'). Elements also allows you to create multiple layers using adjustment layers. Layers in Photoshop Elements differ from layers in Photoshop. Layers can be placed one above the other. It is possible to use the move tool ('Drag') to move the layers if you like. However, the move tool does not work across the border of layers. Therefore, if you move a layer, you need to merge it with its previous or next layer in order to continue the action. Effect Layers An adjustment layer is a layer that displays an effect by itself. It can change the colors, levels, curves, hue/saturation, brightness/contrast, shadows and highlights in a single layer. Adjustment layers can be combined or merged to make effects even more interesting. You can also group layers together to manipulate them quickly. It is also possible to add an adjustment layer as an effect to a canvas. This allows you to apply an adjustment in the same way as you would apply it to a full layer. To do this, right-click the canvas, then select 'Add Adjustment Layer'. Layers in the Standard Toolbox To make your own layers, right-click on a layer in the layers panel to open the drop-down menu. From there, you can do many things. The following is the list of layers and their effects: Default Layers These are the layers that are created by default. They contain all the layers in the layers panel. You can create new layers by right-clicking on the canvas and choosing 'New Layer'. It is also possible to insert a new layer in any layer by simply clicking the selected layer. You can delete a layer by right-clicking on it and choosing 'Delete Layer'. You can remove all layers by selecting 'Layer > Remove All Layers'. Clone Layers In Elements 12, the 388ed7b0c7
